A few pupils, struggling No teacher has any right to learn to keep up with the studies and falling methods at the expense of the pupil. | behind the others, are an injury to the Teachers should tell little and de- whole class and a serious burden to velop much. They should teach their a teacher. Some parents do not seem pupils to think. It is what a pupil to understand that a child that is not crowded in its studies will graduate More and better improvements have with a clearer and brighter mind than been made on our schools during the one that is forced beyond its natural past two years than for any similar ability. The complaint of overstudy can also, to a certain extent, be traced The attendance has steadily increased to a lack of intelligent method and apfrom year to year, until we now have plication on the part of the pupils. We the largest enrollment ever had in the have reports from the parents as to the number of hours which their children It is the duty of teachers to impress spend in home study, but we have no upon the minds of the pupils the way of obtaining information as to the principles of morality, truth, justice character of such study. One hour spent in close, persistent application, Report cards concerning the work of without interruption or distraction, is the pupils will be sent out every two worth three hours of so-called study in months. Parents should examine them the family sitting-room. It must be carefully. If there be anything un- that much of the time thus spent at satisfactory or not understood, please home is wasted; but for this eyil there consult the teacher having your is no remedy except through the advice and instruction of the class teach-The business of all children attend- er. How to study should be a part of the curriculum of every school.
